Aimed at primary school children, the course uses interactive activities and games to engage and excite students. These are designed to motivate children to explore science, to understand the process of science and to explain science in their own words.

The course is designed to be complementary to, and build upon, other Science courses, such as the primary school National Curriculum. It also builds upon the understanding of English and other language, including writing, grammar, vocabulary and listening. In 2015, Macmillan started to work with the British Museum to develop a 'Language-and-Creativity-Centre'. This is a series of courses with the aim of "developing skills in skills in creativity and communication, through language and learning".

The first course was available in the spring of 2015 and was designed for primary aged children. This four-week course was specifically designed to develop language, communication and creativity skills. Macmillan Primary School English Macmillan

Primary School English is an intensive course which teaches English as a foreign language to children aged five to eleven years.

It aims to prepare students for their primary school years with a wider range of English vocabulary and skills. It is a vital resource for those preparing for GCSE and for those wanting to enter the world of study at higher education level. The students in the course are able to communicate orally, by writing and by listening to English. Students are assessed at regular intervals throughout the course and the teacher encourages the students to read, listen, repeat, analyse, interpret and comment upon what they read and hear. Teachers are provided with materials to supplement the course and allow them to teach it with confidence and enthusiasm. Literacy in Education: Language Learning Literacy in Education: Language Learning (LIL) is a course that aims to provide language teachers with the resources and techniques needed to ensure all pupils are able to read and write using their chosen language in their second languages, as well as their mother tongue. It is also provided for language teachers to learn about and become familiar with learning languages through the teaching of literacy. The course aims to show how language knowledge is part of literacy. Literacy in Education: Grammar, Pronunciation and Spelling Literacy in Education: Grammar, Pronunciation and Spelling (LIGSS) is a course designed for teachers who teach English at primary school level. It is specifically designed to help teach students in schools across the world the importance of using correct grammar and pronunciation 82157476af
