Three women are looking to become the first in United States history to have their womb transplants. They'll be facing a pretty big hurdle—they're only eligible for the procedure if they're already pregnant. The three women, who have all given birth, are in the middle of their third rounds of in vitro fertilization (IVF) treatment, and are currently waiting to become pregnant with the help of a donated womb. But the operation is a long one, and pregnancy can take several months. "You will be a patient for weeks, months or even years," according to University of Maryland Medical Center's Reproductive Endocrinology and Infertility Center—these transplants have a success rate of only five percent. And who's paying for all this? The hospital is considering asking patients to chip in $87,000 in fees, a consideration that didn't go over well with one of the women who turned down the procedure, 42-year-old Shannon Stagliano. "She has good family support and she wants to be a mother," Stagliano's wife, Tara Stagliano, told ABC 7 in New York. "It's nice to be able to have that option and not to have to vasodilation produced by electrical stimulation of the sympathetic efferent and postganglionic, prevertebral vasodilator pathways was determined in 26 cats anesthetized with chloralose-urethane. The preganglionic sympathetic pathway of blood pressure control is not blocked by an intravenous bolus of naloxone. The pressor effect of sympathetic preganglionic stimulation was increased significantly by naloxone but the vasodilator effect was not altered by naloxone. These data suggest that blockade of endogenous opioids by naloxone may be beneficial in patients with spasms and even hypertension secondary to spinal cord injury.

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a storage medium processing apparatus, particularly a storage medium processing apparatus configured to process for example an embossed sheet at an adequate positional relation to a read/write head.

2. Description of the Related Art In a storage medium processing apparatus such as a read/write apparatus for an optical disc (hard disc), a control mechanism for controlling an accuracy of the processing of a storage medium such as an embossed sheet is indispensable. The following three examples will be taken to explain the conventional technologies in detail. The first example is a read/write apparatus for an optical disc. In the read/write apparatus for an optical disc, a tray holding an optical disc to be processed is conveyed and, further, a read/write head and a light emitting portion and a light receiving portion provided along a track of the optical disc are disposed facing to an optical recording layer of the optical disc. The read/write head is provided to read/write information data recorded on a recording layer (embossed layer) of the optical disc or write new data in the recording layer of the optical disc. The light emitting portion irradiates a laser beam to the optical recording layer of the optical disc and the light receiving portion detects a reflected light from the optical recording layer of the optical disc. The detecting process is conducted repeatedly at a predetermined timing so as to acquire the information data recorded on the optical disc. The second example is a storage medium processing apparatus. In the storage medium processing apparatus, an embossed sheet provided with an embossed pattern corresponding to information data to be read/written by a reading/writing mechanism is read/written by the reading/writing mechanism. The embossed sheet is processed to a substrate (base) and, for example, an optical disc is produced. The third example is a copying apparatus. In the copying apparatus, a copy paper (original) having an embossed pattern is supplied by an original supply mechanism. The copying apparatus is provided with
